

AMBA Launches Network for Young Professionals

January 31, 2019

Indianapolis, IN – Today, the American Mold Builders Association (AMBA) announced the official launch of its Emerging Leaders Network, a group that will bring together innovative, creative and dedicated young professionals from across all AMBA member companies. These up-and-coming industry leaders come from all over the country and all areas of business.

“Launching a network available to young professionals in mold building is an exciting opportunity for the AMBA. For the first time, we’ll be able to bring together a dynamic group of future industry leaders, meeting our members’ needs and offering them unique experiences, including strategic networking with industry peers of similar ages, leadership development opportunities and access to industry mentors,” said Rachael Pfenninger, AMBA project manager.

Members will meet for the first time at a pre-conference event during the AMBA Conference 2019 (May 8-10), a no-nonsense, two-day exchange that will provide insights on industry trends, operational improvements, leadership strategies and benchmarks that help all attendees learn, improve and grow.

Membership will be open to any young professional under the age of 40 from a current AMBA member company that is interested in AMBA’s mission of uniting individuals and companies, understanding and sharing best practices and networking and building relationships.
